ABSTRACT

This new edition of the Carnegie Classification of Higher Education groups American colleges and universities according to their missions and similarity of their programs and purposes. In this 1994 edition, for the first time, institutions are classified according to the highest level of degree conferred, and a new category is introduced--tribal colleges and universities. A foreword by Ernest L. Boyer reveals trends in higher education as indicated by changes in the classification. Preliminary figures and tables offer data on percentage of institutions within each classification area, enrollment by type of institution, and changes in enrollment over time. Part I then lists public and private institutions by state within the following classification areas: research universities (levels I and II); doctoral universities (levels I and II); master's (comprehensive) colleges and universities (levels I and II); baccalaureate (liberal arts) colleges I; baccalaureate colleges II; associate of arts colleges; and specialized institutions (religion and theology, medical, other health professions, engineering and technology, business and management, art, music, design, law, teachers colleges, and tribal colleges and universities). An index lists institutions alphabetically, along with their respective classifications. (JDD)

FOREWORD

by Ernest L. Boyer

THE CARNEGIE CLASSIFICATION OF HIGHER EDUCATION groups American colleges and universities according to their missions. This classification was developed by Clark Kerr in 1970, primarily to improve the precision of the Carnegie Commission's research. Over the years, the system has gained credibility and served as a helpful guide for scholars and researchers.

The Carnegie Classification is not intended to establish a hierarchy among higher learning institutions. Rather, the aim is to cluster institutions with similar programs and purposes, and we oppose the use of the classification as a way of making qualitative distinctions among the separate sectors. We have, in this country, a rich array of institutions serving a variety of needs, and there are institutions of distinction in every category of the Carnegie Classification.

Over the years, we have modified the definitions somewhat to improve the groupings. In this new edition, the most consequential change we've made is to classify all institutions, for the first time, according to the highest level of degree conferred—from associate of arts to doctoral degrees. This means that the "Liberal Arts" category—which will now be called "Baccalaureate"—includes all colleges where the baccalaureate is the highest degree awarded. The "Comprehensive" category—which will now be called "Master's (Comprehensive)"—includes master's-granting institutions. We're convinced that classifying campuses on the basis of degree level brings still more clarity and objectivity to the process.

Looking for larger patterns, we are once again impressed that, with all the talk about cutbacks and retrenchment, over 400 new institutions appear in this edition—the majority being two-year institutions listed in the Associate of Arts category. Approximately 100 of the new colleges are specialized institutions. This growth is counterbalanced by over 200 institutions that merged, closed, or otherwise are no longer eligible for inclusion in this listing. The overall number of institutions in the 1994 Carnegie Classification increased from 3,389 to 3,595.

The new Carnegie Classification also reveals what some have called the "upward drift" in higher education, and of special interest is the continuing expansion of research and doctoral institutions. America must continue to support a core of world-class research centers; they are essential to the advancement of knowledge and to human achievement. Such activity is costly, however, and it is crucial that we have available the fiscal resources needed to sustain an expanding network of institutions devoted to scholarly research.

Reflecting the trend toward occupational training is the growth in specialized institutions—from 642 in 1987 to 693 today. This expansion includes many new colleges offering programs in health-related fields, fine arts, and technology. Also, several institutions with an emphasis on business or on technology have moved from the two-year to the specialized groups because they now award a substantial number of bachelor's degrees.

We also note, with satisfaction, that the balance between the private and public sectors has, since 1987, remained relatively constant and, in spite of earlier trends and dark predictions, the independent colleges in America have shown resiliency and growth. We urge that public policy continue to acknowledge the contributions of both sectors.

This year, for the first time, we introduce the new category called "Tribal Colleges and Universities." A 1989 Carnegie report, Tribal Colleges: Shaping the Future of Native America, describes these essential institutions, whose mission is of the greatest consequence to Native Americans and to the country. The first tribally controlled college was created, we note, at the same time the Carnegie Classification was originally being developed. Today, twenty-nine such institutions are serving students, not only on their campuses but in tribal communities as well, often under conditions others would consider impossible. The growth of these institutions is remarkable, and it will be of great interest to follow their progress.

The Carnegie Classification does not begin to describe the richness of American higher education. Nor should it be viewed, in any way, as a barrier to creativity. Indeed, it remains a cause for concern that we have, in America, so few colleges that are unapologetically experimental. After World War II there was a network of nontraditional institutions in this nation, colleges that had prestige among peers and took pride in their educational innovations.

Today that network has largely disappeared. We believe there is an important place within the Carnegie Classification for institutions that introduce new strategies and test creative new assumptions even while they maintain academic excellence. We would like to see colleges join together to define distinctive missions, creating, in effect, new "clusters" based not on their degree level, but on their special qualities.

In this regard, a group of institutions has, for some time, been talking about how they might function as "Urban Grant Universities." Several years ago a group of Liberal Arts institutions met to consider the possibility of defining their mission as "Research Colleges." And we've been much encouraged by a movement among a group of Comprehensive colleges. They have formed a consortium to define, for themselves, a special niche in American higher education, establishing what might be called "The New American College."

All of this activity is healthy and illustrates how new institutional groupings can and should be formed to create unique classifications. America's network of colleges and universities is strong precisely because we have avoided a unitary model, and in the days ahead, our goal must be continuously to promote both excellence and innovation in higher education.

Finally, a word of appreciation. This Classification is the result of several years of analysis on the part of Carnegie Foundation Board of Trustees and staff, a distinguished advisory committee, and hundreds of informal communications with campus administrators and academic scholars. We have carefully considered each suggestion and are very grateful for all comments and insights offered. We wish to express special thanks to John Minter, of John Minter Associates, Inc., in Boulder, Colorado, who provided invaluable assistance and advice at all stages of the project.

In summary, the 1994 Carnegie Classification reveals a healthy and expanding network of higher learning institutions in the nation. Voices of gloom and predictions of decline are not supported by the trends. Americans, perhaps as never before, need a vibrant system of higher education, one that is closely tied to the economic and social vitality of the nation and to the private hopes of students and their families.

Colleges and universities in the United States have an amazing capacity to respond creatively to new conditions. This system, accomplished without a "master plan" and federal directive, remains one of America's most remarkable achievements.

DEFINITION OF CATEGORIES

The 1994 Carnegie Classification includes all colleges and universities in the United States that are degree-granting and accredited by an agency recognized by the U.S. Secretary of Education.

Research Universities I: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs, are committed to graduate education through the doctorate, and give high priority to research. They award 50 or more doctoral degrees¹ each year. In addition, they receive annually $40 million or more in federal support.²

Research Universities II: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs, are committed to graduate education through the doctorate, and give high priority to research. They award 50 or more doctoral degrees¹ each year. In addition, they receive annually between $15.5 million and $40 million in federal support.³

Doctoral Universities I: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs and are committed to graduate education through the doctorate. They award at least 40 doctoral degrees¹ annually in five or more disciplines.⁴

Doctoral Universities II: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs and are committed to graduate education through the doctorate. They award annually at least ten doctoral degrees—in three or more disciplines—or 20 or more doctoral degrees in one or more disciplines.⁵

Master's (Comprehensive) Colleges and Universities I: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs and are committed to graduate education through the master's degree. They award 40 or more master's degrees annually in three or more disciplines.⁶

Master's (Comprehensive) Colleges and Universities II: These institutions offer a full range of baccalaureate programs and are committed to graduate education through the master's degree. They award 20 or more master's degrees annually in one or more disciplines.⁷

Baccalaureate (Liberal Arts) Colleges I: These institutions are primarily undergraduate colleges with major emphasis on baccalaureate degree programs. They award 40 percent or more of their baccalaureate degrees in liberal arts fields⁸ and are restrictive in admissions.

Baccalaureate Colleges II: These institutions are primarily undergraduate colleges with major emphasis on baccalaureate degree programs. They award less than 40 percent of their baccalaureate degrees in liberal arts fields⁸ or are less restrictive in admissions.

Associate of Arts Colleges: These institutions offer associate of arts certificate or degree programs and, with few exceptions, offer no baccalaureate degrees.⁹

Specialized Institutions: These institutions offer degrees ranging from the bachelor's to the doctorate. At least 50 percent of the degrees awarded by these institutions are in a single discipline. Specialized institutions include:

Theological seminaries, Bible colleges, and other institutions offering degrees in religion: This category includes institutions at which the primary purpose is to offer religious instruction or train members of the clergy.

Medical schools and medical centers: These institutions award most of their professional degrees in medicine. In some instances, their programs include other health professional schools, such as dentistry, pharmacy, or nursing.

Other separate health profession schools: Institutions in this category award most of their degrees in such fields as chiropractic, nursing, pharmacy, or podiatry.

Schools of engineering and technology: The institutions in this category award at least a bachelor's degree in programs limited almost exclusively to technical fields of study.

Schools of business and management: The schools in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in business or business-related programs.

Schools of art, music, and design: Institutions in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in art, music, design, architecture, or some combination of such fields.

Schools of law: The schools included in this category award most of their degrees in law. The list includes only institutions that are listed as separate campuses in the 1994 Higher Education Directory.

Teachers colleges: Institutions in this category award most of their bachelor's or graduate degrees in education or education-related fields.

Other specialized institutions: Institutions in this category include graduate centers, maritime academies, military institutes, and institutions that do not fit any other classification category.

Tribal colleges and universities: These colleges are, with few exceptions, tribally controlled and located on reservations. They are all members of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium.

NOTES ON DEFINITIONS

1. Doctoral degrees include Doctor of Education, Doctor of Juridical Science, Doctor of Public Health, and the Ph.D. in any field.
2. Total federal obligation figures are available from the National Science Foundation's annual report called Federal Support to Universities, Colleges, and Nonprofit Institutions. The years used in averaging total federal obligations are 1989, 1990, and 1991.
3. Distinct disciplines are determined by the U.S. Department of Education's Classification of Instructional Programs 4-digit series.
4. The liberal arts disciplines include English language and literature, foreign languages, letters, liberal and general studies, life sciences, mathematics, philosophy and religion, physical sciences, psychology, social sciences, the visual and performing arts, area and ethnic studies, and multi- and interdisciplinary studies. The occupational and technical disciplines include agriculture, allied health, architecture, business and management, communications, conservation and natural resources, education, engineering, health sciences, home economics, law and legal studies, library and archival sciences, marketing and distribution, military sciences, protective services, public administration and services, and theology.

5. This group includes community, junior, and technical colleges.

TECHNICAL NOTES

The Carnegie Classification utilizes survey data from the United States Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System [IPEDS], the National Science Foundation, The College Board, and the 1994 Higher Education Directory published by Higher Education Publications, Inc. [hep].

The 1994 Higher Education Directory provided the universe of postsecondary institutions. This book lists information on over 3,600 accredited, degree-granting colleges and universities and more than 100 central or system offices. In addition, this reference was used to verify information on proper names, state, FICE identification, and affiliation or control.

The hep directories published since 1987 were used to track institutions that have opened, closed, merged, lost accreditation status, or changed their names.

The U.S. Department of Education's Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System Completions survey 1988-89, 1989-90, and 1990-91 provided all data on degree conferral. These data are self-reported and collected annually by the Department of Education. Three-year averages of number of degrees conferred were used to determine each institution's placement. Information on the number and type of disciplines in which degrees were awarded came from the IPEDS Completions 1990-91 survey.

Data on the federal support for institutions of higher education for fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991 are available from the National Science Foundation's annual report called Federal Support to Universities, Colleges, and Nonprofit Institutions. These figures are reported to NSF by fifteen federal agencies. Three-year averages of total federal obligations were calculated.

The variables employed in determining selectivity for the Baccalaureate Colleges were: entrance examination scores for fall 1992 first-year students (the SAT values used were ranges incorporating the 25th and 75th percentile scores; the Enhanced ACT scores used similar ranges); and the percentage of fall 1992 first-year students who ranked in the top quarter and top half of their class. Schools that lacked some of the aforementioned data were included if they demonstrated considerable strength in any one category.

The Specialized Institutions are free-standing campuses. They do not represent a comprehensive list of any specific type of institution.

All the Tribal Colleges and Universities are members of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium. Three of them are not formally under tribal control and are not located on reservations. A few of the Tribal Colleges and Universities are not listed in the hep 1994 Higher Education Directory.

The data used to classify institutions can be obtained from the original sources. Total federal obligations figures come from the National Science Foundation; degree-conferral material comes from the U.S. Department of Education's IPEDS, and information on institutional selectivity comes from The College Board. All of these data also can be purchased from John Minter Associates, Inc., of Boulder, Colorado.

While the definitions are intended to establish mutually exclusive categories, some institutions meet the criteria for more than one group. These colleges are denoted with the dagger symbol (†).
